The importance of taking time to build trust

Engagement is about community not the facilitators

Engagement/work must be about providing tools and space, and empower communities to create change for themselves

Reminder of engaging face-to-face people from different backgrounds, giving their different view points

Listen to the existing structure - important to listen and adhere to community norms and practices

Face-to-face meetings to understand individuals first mixed and diverse view points from all that participated

It was a good reminder to hear that it takes time and patience to build trust tapping into one person who could bring the rest of their community on board

Don't expect people to come to you how do you convince communities that we are not one more box to tick, asking to help the end goal being aware of the communities you are engaging with Using un-conventional spaces to engage Gatekeepers are not the only members of the community don,t own process just safeguarding it. Holding spacecritical questioning and deep listeningnot your responsibility to change cultures and norms but work with themself awareness , involve community

Don't just try to sign people up to things - have a conversation and have fun not to get frustrated with the process

It might have been nice to hear from the communities themselves

Nice to see similarities in needs and approaches internationally

Power to vs power with

How do you de-centre yourself?

By the community, for the community
